Photography student documenting life at St. Kizito

Western Kentucky University student, Bryan Anselm, is a nineteen year old college junior majoring in photojournalism.

He discovered 4 Oneworld on-line and inquired about an Internship in Uganda.

Unfortunately, 4 Oneworld did not have a program or any funds available to help him in his quest to travel to Africa and document the culture.

Bryan said he wanted to "...travel to Uganda and photograph the St. Kizito School to help promote 4OneWorld and its mission to provide education to impoverished children. I plan to document the school in order to show people what life is like for the children in Uganda. The trip will also be a valuable learning experience for me and allow me to use my photography to help others. I hope that my images will enlighten people about some of the many issues in Uganda and move them to help make a difference."

Bryan succeeded in making this a reality! He arrived in Uganda on May26th and he will stay through the end of July.

"I was impressed with Bryan's enthusiasm and motivation to make this happen. We are so pleased to have Bryan photographing at St. Kizito. He is a talented photographer and we are looking forward to seeing his images." stated 4 Oneworld director, Tara McKinney.
